Pedagogical approaches toward our Curriculum

Theme based approaches

Play based approaches

Activity based approaches

Project based approaches

Experiential based approaches

The Reggio Emilia curriculum is an educational philosophy focusing on early childhood education. It emphasizes child-centered learning, creativity, and collaboration. Here are the key principles:

1. Image of the Child

Children are viewed as capable, curious, and full of potential.
They are considered active participants in their own learning process.

2. Emergent Curriculum

The curriculum evolves based on the interests, ideas, and questions of the children. Teachers observe children closely and use those observations to guide the learning process.

3. Project-Based Learning

Learning occurs through long-term, in-depth projects that children explore. These projects can last days, weeks, or even months, depending on the children's interests.

4. The Role of the Teacher

Teachers are co-learners and collaborators, rather than just instructors. They facilitate exploration and encourage problem-solving rather than providing direct answers.

5. The Environment as the "Third Teacher"

The learning environment is considered a crucial element in the educational experience. Spaces are designed to be engaging, beautiful, and conducive to exploration. Natural materials and open-ended resources are often used.

6. Collaboration

Collaboration is highly valued, not only between children but also between teachers, families, and the community. Group work and dialogue are central to learning.

7. Documentation

Teachers carefully document children's work and learning processes, using photos, notes, and videos. This documentation serves to track progress, reflect on learning, and communicate with parents and others.

8. 100 Languages of Children

The curriculum acknowledges that children express themselves in multiple ways (languages)—through art, movement, music, play, and more. These various modes of expression are integral to learning.

9. Parent Involvement

Parents are considered partners in the learning process, and their input is actively encouraged. They participate in the life of the school and contribute to the learning environment.

This curriculum emphasizes respect for the child's individual interests and the belief that children learn best in a supportive, flexible, and exploratory environment.
